

Ernest Bazanye is a Ugandan journalist, blogger, author, and scriptwriter.

All I have ever wanted to do is write. Even after I had written, I just wanted to write again. This is how I sustained a career: twenty years of compulsive typing and then typing again and again.

My most enduring work is the weekly humor column I wrote for the Sunday Vision newspaper, Ernest Bazanye's Bad Idea, but I have also worked with Next Media and Nation Media Group and have served as a screenwriter for two shows on Pearl Magic TV. Along the way I authored three children's books, four if you count the ebook compilation Kuonyesha Art Fund was gracious enough to enable me to produce, and which is to date my proudest achievement because I saw it make children smile.

I consider it my vocation to capture the story of Uganda, the character of Uganda, and the overarching theme of my people and sharing it with the world.
